But the speaker, Hashemi Rafanjani, also told the parliament of the danger of internal squabbling over the hostage agreement, in which Iran settled for much less than the $24 hillion it had demanded from the United States in return for the hostages.

Already there have been signs of friction on the issue, involving chief hostage negotiator Behzad Nabavi and President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

The Majlis speaker said that if it had not been for the embassy seizure the shah probably would still be alive and a focus of opposition to the Iranian revolutionary government.

PARIS — France is quietly slow-ing its pursuit of a multibilliondollar gas deal with the Soviet Union that the Carter administration warned could result in Western Europe becoming dependent on Soviet energy, senior diplomats and officials said Wednesday.

West Germany and other Enropean nations were also raising questions about the deal, mainly regarding how fast to proceed in negotiating its complex terms. But European officials emphasized. that the new caution should not be perceived as cooling to the project as a whole.

Allies Lift Trade Ban Against Iran

Gulf War Expected To Inhibit Relations

By Joseph Fitchett International Herald Tribune

PARIS - Enropean governments and Japan lifted the trade embargo against Iran Wednesday that was the centerpiece of their support for the United States in the hostage crisis.

Although anxious to start restoring Western relations with Iran, these governments will be handicapped by the Iraqi-Iranian war that erupted during the U.S. hostages' captivity, several diplomats

Besides imposing trade sauctions and refusing to buy Iranian oil, European governments in ef-fect complied with the U.S. bid to freeze Iranian assets in U.S.-owned institutions by allowing Iranian challenges against the freeze to bog down in the courts. Several countries, particularly France, conduct-ed behind-the-scenes diplomacy to help secure the hostages' release through Invian intermediaries. Japan agreed to apply the oil and exports bans.

Despite the trade restrictions imposed last May, exports by in-dustrial countries to Iran increased in 1980. Inflation pushed up the face value of ongoing contracts that were not affected by the embargo. Both Britain and Japan ex-ported about $1.5 billion in goods in 1980 on this basis.

Trade Increase

Agricultural and pharmaceutical exports, which also were not covered, increased from France, whose 1980 exports to Iran are estimated to have reached $1 billion. West German trade rose nearly 20 percent last year to $1.2 billion for the first 10 months of the year.

Iran's most pressing need is quick delivery of military equipquick delivery of manary leping-ment that it has already bought; but Britain and France, the main European suppliers, will be can-tious about supplying arms that could offend Iraq and worsen the Gulf conflict. Acknowledging allied help, a knowledgeable diplo-mat said that the performance of Environment approximation appreciation European governments nonetheless was rated as uneven by most U.S. officials.

Iranian Contends 4 Jailed Britons Are Not Hostages

Reuters TEHRAN — An adviser of Iran's premier said Wednesday that four Britons detained here were not hostages and that calling them this obscured the issue of the 52 American captives released

Tuesday. The official Pars news agency said Mohammed Hashemi, adviser to Premier Mohammed Ali Rajai, told Swedish Ambassador Goran Bundy at a meeting: "The deten-tion of the four British nationals in Tehran has no connection with the imprisonment of three Iranian Moslem students in England" as the Swedish ambassador reportedly claimed. Sweden represents Britn in Iran. "We told the Swedisb ambassa-

Reduce taxes and the burden of government. "In this present crisis, government is not the solution to our problem; government is the problem," Mr. Reagan said. A World Away Sooner or later, however, Mr.

Reagan and his new team of economic advisers are more realistically going to have to discuss, publicly and in detail, just how they plan to get from a world of 7.4percent unemployment and dou-blo-digit inflation rates to, in the president's words, "a healthy, vigorous, growing economy." None of the Reagan appointees has volunteered to describe, even in general terms, exactly what is supposed to happen quarter by quarter once the large personal and business tax cuts and governand business tax cuts and govern-ment spending cuts are put in place. The key question is: if a 7½-percent or 8-percent unemploy-ment rate has done so little to slow inflation, why would faster economic growth do it? Faster growth would reduce workers' apprehensions about layoffs and their employers' anxieties about their ability to pay higher wages in a depressed economy. Unless the rate of increase in wages - which is now fully consonant with a double-digit inflation rate - comes down, inflation will not come down. And wby should anyone settle for less when trying to keep up with such an inflation and when expecting job prospects to get better?

This is the real world prospect confronting Mr. Reagan. Of course, a large rise in productivity which has the effect of reducing effect of reducin

Signals to Reagan

No one can tell the magnitude of the change in U.S. foreign policy that will result from the election of Ronald Reagan. But even a minor midstream shift in direction by a superpower is bound to cause waves at the center and ripples at the periphery. These have begun to show up already in the form of official statements and reports by government-controlled media reflecting the expectations and aspirations of some countries; and through the actions of others apparently encouraged by the rhetoric of the Reagan campaign.

The reaction that matters most, of course, is the one from the Soviet Union. And as usual at the start of a new U.S. administration. Moscow is sending what sound like mixed signals, but really mean: If you do the things we want like getting the SALT-2 treaty ratified, forgetting your wild ideas about surprassing us in an arms race, not doing anything to impede our global aspirations, etc.. then we can have detente — which means that you will be free to sell us technology, wheat, or whatever else we need, and we will let a few Jews emigrate in return. If you don't we will spend whatever we must to maintain our position as a global power. That implies territorial expansion.

From China, the potential superpower of the next century, President Reagan got a leoture: His attention was directed to the Shanghai communique establishing the ground rules for developing relations between Peking and Washington. There is one China, only one China, and its capital is in Peking, was the particular kernel meant to sink into the consciousness of the new administration, which during the campaign threw periodic bouquets to Taiwan. The Chinese will not compromise that principle. President Reagan would do well to remember that if be is counting on China in his global strategy.

A couple of recent actions by the South African government are noteworthy, too. It can't be demonstrated conclusively that they result from expectations raised by Mr. Reagan's election, but the coincidence with the new administration's accession to power is too striking to overlook. First, the South Africans have withdrawn their support from the latest plan to grant Namibia independence. And second, they have forced the closing of the country's two largest black newspapers. They certainly would have gotten flack from the Carter administration on both actions. They probably won't from President. Reagan.

If the new U.S. administration does not respond to South Africa's crackdown on the black press and its Namibian pullback, its failure to react will reverberate around the world. It will be heard most loudly in South Korea where Kim Dae Jung is awaiting execution, and in various Latin American and World dictatorships. If President Third Reagan does not want to be misinterpreted, thereby confusing allies and adversaries alike, he must act quickly and decisively to scotch any misunderstandings based on the sketchy policy outline on which he campaigned.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

A 'Post-Hostage' Course

The are at least two specific political les-sons that can be drawn from the hostage crisis, one true and one false. The false one is that the United States has no future in the Third World. The evidence for this is that the hostages were seized notwithstanding the fact that Jimmy Carter had been moving systematically to accommodate the new regime. Indeed, his warming evidently struck some Iranians as a threat to their program for revolution. That's wby, an unspontaneous 13 days after the shah arrived in New York, they struck,

Yet no simple Third World conclusion follows. Certainly the United States must be sure to give no overt comfort in any way now to a bandit regime. But a broad U.S. interest in Iran's oil, stability and territorial integrity necessarily endures. There is also the example of Algeria, the indispensable mediator. In respect to Iran, the Carter premise of U.S.-Third World commonality was sapped, but in respect to Algeria, recently under new leadership, it was strengthened. Clearly, it's a matter of dealing with these countries one by one.

second specific lesson that can The them. Did it not catch the attention of those who seized the U.S. diplomats that Mr. Carter had seemed to let an earlier seizure pass? Did his relative restraint in the Nov. 4 kidnapping strike the Kremlin as it puzzled over how to bring the Afghans into line? This is not to say that events do not have complex causations. But one factor in the mixture will always be a judgment of the U.S. reaction, and this is a factor the United States is uniquely well-placed to influence.

It did not take President Reagan's inaugu-. ral address to make clear that he understands this well. But he will have to navigate in complex circumstances. This time, he clearly helped to make the difference by flaunting his image of muscular unpredictability. The next time, domestic consensus and international support may not be so available. Military might can be expanded, but it cannot. make U.S. factories and cars run without oil.

Still, we are inclined to agree with Mr. Reagan that the essential element is, as he puts it, "will and moral courage." These qualities cannot be divorced from physical resources of various sorts. The will to use available power is, bowever, a critical first PARIS - Jeane Kirkpatrick, power? It seems, indeed, that the who will be the Reagan administration's new ambassador to the United Nations, won her job with a magazine article which argued that the United States should have done? sometimes back "moderately repressive" governments when the alternative is leftist radicalism.

She accused the Carter adminis-tration of a double standard in this matter. Mrs. Kirkpatrick says, cor-rectly, that some dictatorships are worse than others. The better ones, she argues, may have to be backed against what would take their place, and she adds that Jimmy Carter has behaved "not like a ready man who abhors autocrats but like one who abhors only right-wing autocrats." The background to all of this obviously is Iran, Nicaragus, and Vietnam.

also an illusion to believe that dictators, moderately repressive or otherwise, stand or fall according to whether the United States supports them. It was the shah of Iran and Anatasio Somoza who failed in Iran and Nicaragua. They failed even though they enjoyed powerful support from the United States un-til almost the end. Both of them afterwards said that they had been weakened by the criticisms made of them in the erratic course of the Carter administration's human rights campaign, and they undoubtedly are correct. But dictators ought to be able to survive foreign criticisms (some thrive on them), especially when the criticisms have no substantial effect on the support they receive. The imperial government of Iran was breaking into parts and crashing down when the Carter administration abandoned the shah. Washington's public support for him continued until December, 1979, just before his abdication even though it appears that U.S. officials could not agree on how to advise him. They might have told him to crack down on the Islamic militants, but declined to do so. He could have done it on his own. As William Bundy writes, in a recent Foreign Affairs. The re-peated statements of support from the White House clearly implied that he [the shah] would be backed whatever be decided to do. The one thing the administration did not suggest - and probably would have declined if it had been asked - was the direct support of American military forces if Iranian forces sought to subdue the revolt and then ran into trouble."

In Nicaragna, the United States had supported the Somoza family from 1937 until the day, in 1979, when it became evident that Anatasio Somoza could no longer keep order in his country. The United States then tried to lash together non-radical forces - at a time when political initiative had alsustainable passed to the Sandinista

In his long years as an actor and a politician, Mr. Reagan never had such a perfect setting on the American stage, let alone the world stage. The drama critics would have loved it.

Vast Multitude

For the first time, a new presi-dent looked down from the West Wing of the Capitol toward the sunset, where he could see the memorials to Presidents Washing-ton, Jefferson, and Lincoln, and beyond the Potomac to the grave of John Kennedy and the mansion of General Lee. There was a vast multitude at his feet, the largest at any presidential inaugural ceremo-ny on the long swale below the Capitol.

Everything was planned to per-fection for television. The new president's lady, beautiful as ever, had on a red or raspberry dress and hat, modestly spectacular, which dominated the eye of the color television cameras. The new president was amiably serious, and made one of the best inaugural speeches in recent memory. It was flawlessly presented, and divided into three parts. First, he was courteons to Mr. Carter, thanking him for the transition from one administration to anoth-er, but ignoring Mr. Carter's suc-cesses while emphasizing his fail-mes. Second, he blamed Mr. Carter, among others, for the eco-nomic distress of the nation, which he said was threatening the future of our children. Government is not the solution, it is the problem," Mr. Reagan said. "It is time to reawaken this industrial giant ... to get government back within its means, and to lighten our punitive tax burden. These will be our first priorities, and on these principles there will be no compromises."

No Compromises?

He was very tough on this. No compromises? Yet in the last part of his speech, Mr. Reagan was not only generous but wise and even compassionate. He talked about making amends both at home and abroad, and was hopeful that we could revive our hope and make

i Iran has released the bostages. The 52 'Americans are safe and free. Hallelnjah! In this happy moment, tribute must be paid to the faith and courage of the men and women who underwent the long captivity. President Carter's firm, patient and bonorable handling of the situation entitles him to the 'country's admiration.

At long last our national agony is over. The agony is near an end for the hostages themselves, for their families and for this nation, which never, not for one single day, forgot the 52 Americans so unjustly imprisoned. The joy we feel, though, has to be tinged with some dark introspection, for never in our history has this county been so humiliated by a foreign power, and by a weak nation at that. - From the Cleveland Press.

The United States has paid a terrible price and more bills will come. It has violated its sound principle of not negotiating with terrorists. And thus it has guaranteed more kidnapping of U.S. officials and civilians because that crime is profitable.

And so it is over at last, the ordeal of 52 Americans beld bostage by Iran for more than 141/2 months and the ordeal of a nation humiliated by their plight and constantly fearing for their safety. The agreement on the hostages comes as a relief to all Americans, a great load lifted from the national consciousness. For President Carter, leaving office, it is a moment of final personal satisfaction. For President Reagan, it will be one less gnawing and frustrating problem to contend with. For 52 Americans and their families, it is a time of thanksgiving for their deliverance

-From the Los Angeles Times.

Much as Americans must rejoice over return of the hostages, so must every American contemplate the price the U.S. government agreed to pay. For 141/2 months we have been on our knees before a gang of hoodlums and religious fanatics, begging them, please, please. No American can escape a feeling of shame. And what can other nations think? We have promised to protect the Gulf region . from invasion. Yet, we cannot protect 52 Americans held captive in defiance of international law. The United States must vow, never again.

ST. PETERSBURG - People openly express doubts as to whether the much-talked of Duma will ever meet. It will, however, assemble in all probability at latest by May 15. There are many here who do not wish to see a Duma. The army and the court, powerful factions each, are bitterly against it. So also is the great Tchinovnik clan and even some of the ministers. But the emperor has been sturdily loyal throughout and has never once listened to the crafty insinuations that have reached the old regime. NEW YORK - "Hunger parades," many inspired by Communist agitators, occurred today in widely scattered sections of the country, including San Francisco, and in some instances ended in rioting and disorder. The most serious disturbance broke out in Oklahoma City, Okla., when 300 men marching to city hall to demand food broke into a grocery store by smashing out the windows. They overpowered the shopkeeper and his clerks and commandeered a large amount of edibles before police, answering a riot call, scattered them with charges and tear gas. Many arrests were made, including a number of Communists.

A measure of detachment would be useful to Mr. Reagan and his people. What counts in Central America, looking at the strictly-defined interest of the United States, is not which party or faction rules, or even whether democracy is installed - which is desirable but unlikely. It is whether the Soviet Union, or some other major power hostile to the United States, is installed there. And as the Cuban missile affair demonstrated, that problem is manageable. The hostages' release is the in-stant case. Whatever Mr. Reagan may have said along the way about the dishonor of negotiating with "barbarians," he could hardly question the judgment of the re-doubtable leader of the hostage families, Louisa Kennedy, when asked if her husband and the rest had been returned with "honor." With the advent of the Reagan administration comes the renewal of a prolonged struggle be-tween the United States and the Soviet Union over the basic terms of their global competition.

While the Soviet Union is intent on restoring its original concept of detente — equality with the United States to shape or alter the world order — the Reagan administration is deter-mined to overhaul the formula drastically, or to reached a peak of 40,000 men; but nothing like "a combat brigade" had been identified in the intervening years of greatly reduced Soviet force levels.

What developed is familiar enough on the U.S. side. The Carter administration originally disclaimed evidence of any change in the Sovi-et military presence on the island, only to discover by satellite photography in late August what U.S. intelligence labeled a "Soviet com-bat brigade." The choice of words was devastating politically, although no evidence devel-oped that the unit was new, or intended for

Mr. Reagan as his opponent, Mr. Ford broke Mr. Reagan as his opponent, Mr. Ford broke off the SALT negotiations early that year; dropped "detente" entirely from his vocabu-lariy, and substituted "peace through strength." • Simultaneously, the United States was moving on two other fronts toward a more mil-itantly anti-Soviet policy: • Vice President Mondale traveled to Pe-king at the end of August to intensify the coor-dination of anti-Soviet policy with China. • The United States was now seeking to in-

Americans to follow; in Moscow they began to take on the dimensions of a plot.

In 1962 Soviet strategists had sworn "never again" to allow their nation to be humiliated as it was that year, when the Soviet Union was forced to withdraw its nuclear missiles from Cuba, under the threat of overwhelming U.S. military attack. China seized on the Soviet plight to mock its ideological rival for "adven-turism" in sending its missiles into Cuba, and for "capitalationism" in pulling them out.

No American can be certain to what extent the Soviet leadership truly believed that such a design actually existed in Carter administration planning. But it is significant that this patterm of intentions was being attributed to the Carter administration by Soviet sources as ear-ly as mid-September, 1979, more than three before the Soviet U into Afghanistan. That was what occurred in the U.S. assessment of Soviet intentions, in the months leading up to the intervention in Afghanistan. The two sequences, the dispute over the Soviet brigade, and Soviet preparations for military action in Afghanistan, overlapped in the autumn

President Carter was obliged to announce on Oct. I that the Soviet Union refused to go beyond assurance that its military units in vict intransigence. At the same time, U.S. intelligence was sounding an alarm about Soviet intentions in Afghanistan.

'Crescendo of Crisis'

The situation in Afghanistan deteriorated rapidly in the following weeks. At the same time, the United States became engulied in what a dismayed Carter administration saw as what a dismayed Carter administration saw as "a crescendo of crisis." On Nov. 4. 1979, the U.S. Embassy was seized in Tehran, with the capture of American hostages plunging the Carter administration into its most agonizing ordeal, and raising fear that the Soviet Union would exploit the tide of anti-Americanism in the region to imperil the West's oil lifelines in the Gulf. Then, on Nov. 21. Pakistani mobs attacked and burned the U.S. Embassy in Islamabad. Afghanistan, sandwiched between Iran and

Pakistan, was overshadowed on the U.S. scale of priorities, just as it turned into the Krem-

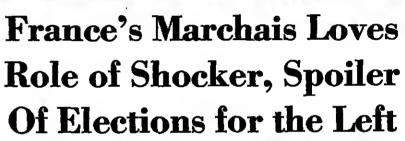

In's dominant objective in the region. By late November, U.S. intelligence reports showed an increasing buildup of Soviet per-sonnel and equipment on the Soviet side of the Afghanistan border. The United States, in ear-ly December, began sounding diplomatic and public warnings about the Soviet military preparations. On five occasions in December, up to the day of the Soviet intervention, the United States cantioned the Soviet Union, in discussions in Washington and in Moscow, that intervention in Afghanistan would have "serious consequences" on the two nations' relations.

But there was no "or else" message. "We did not specify what action we would take," it was reported later by Marshall Shulman, special adviser on Soviet affairs to Mr. Vance. The Carter administration had no effective counterweight to apply. The State Department acknowledged in a letter to a House subcommittee last April 10, submitted by Mr. Shuiman, that "the weight of our views was diminished by the frayed state of U.S.-Soviet relations and the fact that we had already invoked the prospect of damage to U.S.-Soviet relations and SALT on several other issues." The SALT argument was brushed aside by the Soviet Union. Another senior U.S. official, in private, expressed the Soviet attitude more bluntly: "They told us, in effect, 'Bug off.'

Even then, the magnitude of the Soviet plunge into Afghanistan, which began on the evening of Dec. 24 with a massive airlift of

Marchais: "It is inadmissable to allow any more immigrants into France

By Jonathan Kandell nternational Herald Tribune

PARIS — Georges Marchais, the Com-munist candidate for the French presidential election in late April, likes to warm up his campaign audiences with a favorite anecdote — "an image that is seared in my memory," as he says. He recalls boarding a plane in an Afri-can capital after a visit to lend his support to a local Marxist movement. The aircraft is filled with rancous French middle-class tourists wearing "bizarre sombreros, straw hats, shirts with large flower patterns." "Seeing me so unexpectedly" — the glee now spreads across his face — "the tour-

They applanded his denunciations of unemployment and inflation under Presi-dent Valery Giscard d'Estaing, and his sharp attacks on the Socialists for allegedly shifting toward the right. But the loudest cheers came when he asserted that it was "inadmissible to allow any more immigrants in France" while the jobless rate remained so high.

Unlike the other major candidates in the coming election — Mr. Giscard d'Es-taing, Socialist leader Francois Mitter-rand, and possibly, Jacques Chirac, who heads the neo-Gaullist party — Mr. Marchais does not entertain any hopes of be coming chief of state. His main concern is to halt the political rise of the Socialists and eventually regain Communist leadership of the French left. Mr. Marchais became his party's secretary-general in 1972 at a point when the French Communists were trying to shake off their Stalinist image. He presided over an effort to moderate Communist ideology and achieve an electoral coalition with the Socialists that would eventually bring the left to power. But for many Communist militants the most important result of their party's strategy was instead the remarkable growth of the Socialists, whose electoral support bounded from 5 percent a decade ago to about 25 percent by 1977, comfort-ably outdistancing the Communists and threatening to bleed them of support. Once Mr. Marchais and the Communist leadership decided that a break had to be made with the Socialists, it became evident that their strongest base of support was their orthodox militants — people who always distrusted the Socialists as "bourgeois reformers" and never stopped looking toward Moscow for guidance in foreign policy. "This premise is not a bad bet," said Jean Rony, a leading Communist dissident. "The party is again finding a certain coherence During the last three years, Mr. Mar-chais has worked hard to give his party a distinctly more combative image than the Socialists. And his decision to launch his presidential campaign last October, months before any other major candidate, has afforded him ample time to establish the differences in the public mind.

'Grand Designs'

It took the Soviet Union a decade of extremely costly military expansion to cancel out the strategic advantage that the United States held at the time of the missile crisis. For the opening of its deepest wound in the super-power rivalry. Rejecting any change in the status quo" in Cuba, the Kremlin doomed Mr. Vance's attempts to work out a face-saving compromise with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to quiet the uproar in the United States.

The United States, Soviet planners suspected, either was attempting to extort a wholly new price for SALT, or it was engaged in a devious change of policy. In Soviet perception, a U.S. "grand design" began to fall into place.

"ludicrons" - included the following elements:

· The United States deliberately had "concocted" a new imaginary "Soviet threat" in Cuba, to give the Carter administration "a pretext" to sidetrack ratification of the SALT ac-• Why? To enable Presidential election.

to the political right, in order to meet the challenge raised from that direction by Ronald Reagan, Mr. Carter therefore could repeat the pattern followed by President Gerald Ford in the 1976 presidential primary election. With

The events that went into the Soviet "grand design" looked totally different from a U.S. DEISDOCUVE!

• The dispute over a Soviet brigade in Cuba was as much of a surprise to the Carter administration as it was to the Soviet Union. Mr. Carter wanted to save the nuclear agreement, not abandon it - although his political fate did turn out to be the same as that of Mr. Ford, who lost the 1976 election to Mr. Carter. Mr. Mondale's trip to China had been an-nounced long before the first hint of dispute over a Soviel brigade in Cuba, and was unrelated to that episode.

 The plan to deploy U.S. Pershing missiles and Cruise missiles in Western Europe similarly came out of a different context: to counter the deployment of Soviet SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers in Eastern Europe. The U.S. missile plan, later confirmed by the foreign ministers of NATO at their December, 1979, meeting, would have drawn bitter Soviet opposition in the most placid U.S.-Soviet climate.

In assembling an ominous design out of these separate actions, Soviet officials had done what planners on both sides do constantly: seek out possible connecting links in the adversary's actions, to determine if there is a predictable pattern of actions or intentions.

If a planner looks hard enough at an adver-sary's actions from a "worst case" premise, that is what usually emerges. There are times, of course, when the "worst case" assessment troops and other units into the capital of Kabul, and continued for three days in its initial stage, startled many U.S. policy-makers. Pro-mier Hafizullah Amin, the Soviet Union insisted, had called for Soviet aid. On Dec. 27, after Soviet troops seized key points in Kabul, Amin and members of his family were executed.

By climinating Amin, the Soviet Union de-stroyed any plansible international premise for its presence in Afghanistan, as evidenced by overwhelming condemnation of its action outside the Soviet bloc. Unlike the Soviet military interventions in Hungary in 1956, or in Czech-oslovakia in 1968, in Afghanistan the Soviet Union had reached far beyond its recognized security zone to impose its ant'iority on an unaligned Moslem nation.

This action of the Soviets." Mr. Carter declared, "made a more dramatic change in my own opinion of what the Soviets' altimate goals are than anything they have done in the previous time I've been in office." That public expression of shock brought ridicule from the president's critics for his naivete. The Soviet tervention however, while far less surprising to hardened veterans of U.S.-Soviet competition, was an unprecedented extension of Soviet military power.

Private Concessions

Many Soviet sources conceded that, in private. They acknowledged that the Soviet Union had gone beyond anyone's interpretation of detente, but claimed justification for the Soviet action in the imperatives of Soviet security, following U.S. default on its commitments to detente.

It is the official Soviet position that all its actions in Afghanistan were fully sanctioned by international law, in response to pleas for aid from a nation endangered by foreign agents. The Soviet Union claimed that "Tens of thousands of mercenaries, anned with for-eign arms ... put in the hands of saboteurs by American and Chinese instructors," and "even specialists in subversion ... from Egypt," were operating from bases in Pakistan.

'In effect," Mr. Brezhnev charged, "imperialism together with its accomplices launched an undeclared war against Afghanistan."

Some Western specialists believe that the Soviet Union was genuinely fearful that the United States and China might acquire a foot-hold in Afghanistan, with Amin developing into an Asian version of Yugoslavia's Tito.

The Soviet Union's resort to massive force in Afghanistan was so crude, however, and its rationalizations so weak, that it has made palpably little headway in convincing the nations. of the world of the righteousness of its cause. That was demonstrated again last November, nearly a year after the Soviet drive into Afghanistan, by a 111-to-22 vote in the United Nations General Assembly demanding a withdrawal of "foreign troops" from Afghanistan.

Stronger Perceptions

Afghanistan inevitably produced in U.S. perception a far more menacing Soviet "grand design" than the design that the Soviet Union attributed to the United States.

"The implications of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan," Mr. Carter told Congress last January in his State of the Union address, "could pose the most serious threat to world peace since the Second World War."

He warned that "an attempt by any outside force to gain control of the Persian Gulf region will be regarded as an assault on the vital interests of the United States of America, and such an assault will be repelled by use of any means necessary, including military force."

To many world diplomats, both declarations represented excessive alarm. Nevertheless, a year later, the threat to the West's sources of oil that hangs over the Gulf is not imaginary.

secretary-general of the French Communist Party, ah, no, not that! I wasn't part of their world and I was spoiling the end of their safari!"

Georges Marchais loves to unsettle, irritate, shock. He welcomes opprobrium from that vast majority of the electorate who will never vote Communist under any circumstances. And he invites his followers to think of themselves as a minority under siege.

Successful Tactics

These are tactics that have served Mr. Marchais well because in recent years he has undertaken a number of controversial initiatives that would discomfit a more timid politician. Back in late 1977, with a united French left seemingly driving toward expected victory in national legislative elections, Mr. Marchais led his party against its er-stwhile Socialist allies in a bitter attack that has not yet ended. Most political observers continue to blame the Communists for the leftist defeat that followed in March, 1978.

Early in 1980, within days after the Russian intervention in Afghanistan, Mr. Marchais flew to Moscow and staunchly defended the Soviet action in a television interview beamed live back to France. The incident dashed any remaining hopes that a strong Eurocommunist movement independent of Moscow could emerge in Western Europe. And now the 60-year-old former steelworker is engaged in what may be his most controversial maneuver — an at-tempt to gain political advantage from growing resentment in France against immigrant workers. The 4 million foreigners, mostly North Africans, black Africans, Portuguese, Spaniards and Italians, pose no threat of a political backlash because they are not allowed to vote.

The issue surfaced dramatically on Christmas Eve when a Communist-led group of protestors bulldozed and ransacked a dormitory for African laborers in the Paris working-class suburb of Vitry-sur-Seine. Rather than disavow the racial violence. Mr. Marchais lashed out at what he called the excessive immigrant population in Communist municipalities. A week later, Communist councilmen in Rennes, Brittany canceled a building permit for an Islamic center for North African families, and the Communist mayor of Amiens, in the Somme region north of Paris, denounced the concentration of immigrant families in his city.

Something Cracked

A number of dissident Communist intellectuals have resigned from the party following these incidents. "That buildozer in Vitry made something crack inside me," said Antoine Spire, a university pro-fessor who formerly helped direct a Communist publishing house.

Mr. Marchais has shrugged off such defections as the acts of "a few Communists abandoning the battle because of pressures from the bourgeois adversary." Soundings taken by his party's Central Committee indicate that he should pick up popular support on the immigrant issue and come close to achieving the 20percent vote that Communist candidates traditionally gather in national elections. The well-organized party campaign rallies show no signs of flagging attendance. Last week, several thousand supporters

'Crisis of Capitalism'

While the Socialists have more or less accepted the government's contention that there are no quick solutions to unemployment and inflation, Mr. Marchais tells his listeners that economic troubles are "a crisis of capitalism," that the effect of rising oil prices "is practically negligible on growth and employment," and that if elected he would "make the rich pay."

On a campaign swing through Brittany, where opposition is greatest to the government's nuclear energy program, Mr. Marchais came out strongly in favor of atomic plants and denounced anti-nuclear protestors as "agents of American imperialism."

"Nobody is going to be able to claim that our party and the Socialists stand for roughly the same things," said one of Mr. Marchais' campaign aides last week.

That prospect deeply troubles the Soci-alists. Under the French political system, if no candidate gathers a majority of the votes in the first electoral round in late April, a second vote is held in early May between the two leading presidential candidates.

Mr. Marchais is steadfastly refusing to say whether he would swing his party's support behind Mr. Mitterrand in the second round. And even if most Communist supporters did finally back Mr. Mitterrand, he may be weakened in the eyes of moderate voters who find it difficult to believe he could form a credible government with a quarrelsome Communist Party in the wings. "It has been clear for some time that Marchais prefers Giscard to a Socialist president," said Claude Estier, a ranking Socialist official. "We know that if we win it will have to be despite Marchais."

He told the opposition lesder that tressing their suspicion that the United States prefers Mr. Marcos violence would result only in makto the opposition, despite his auhuman rights. They suspect the United States of abetting Mr. Mar-cos in what they consider a cosmetic exercise of lifting martial law while retaining authoritarian power. A group of students voicing that point of view demonstrated briefly in front of the U.S. Embassy on Tuesday until they were dispersed hy police. Mr. Aquino, who even while he was in prison was regarded as Mr. Marcos' most serious rival, appears to be more disposed than opposition leaders in the Philippines to view the lifting of martial law last Saturday as at least offering the possibility of eventual political liberalization. Opposition leaders in Manila see nn basis for discussion with the president. "Without dismantling the appa-ratus of dictatorship, the lifting of martial law is a cruel deception." Mr. Aquinn said in the telephone interview. But he said that the op-position should "take it at face value" and observe whether Mr. Marcos follows up with measures of liberalization. The test issues cited by Mr. Aquino were genuine press free-dom, a resumption of political life, a restoration of labor rights and the release of remaining political prisoners. The opposition leader said he shared Mr. Holbrooke's opposi-tion to violence. He said he would always counsel opposition groups against violence but added that if Mr. Marcos did not restore free-dom, "my counsel may become irrelevant.

'Passion Play': Alter Egos Fail to Provide Much

By Sheridan Morley ational Herald Tribune

L ONDON - Not since the mid-1940s, when Mary Chase first produced her in-visible rabbit out of the Broadway hat in "Harvey," has there been the invention of a stage device quite so neat as that provided by Peter Nichols for his new "Passion Play," now in an agile Royal Shakespeare Company production by Mike Ockrent at the Aldwych. The device is simply that of the alter ego. Both main characters have by intermission appeared on stage in duplicate, so that while James and Eleanor are man and wife, visible to each other and their neighbors, him and Nell are their consciences, inner souls and confidantes, visible only to themselves and of course to us. Two characters, four actors. So far so splendid, especially when you consider that the RSC has wheeled in an impressive guest-star quartet of Billie Whitelaw, Eileen Atkins, Benjamin Whitrow and Anton Rodgers, the first two play-ing Eleanor and the second two playing James in their public and private incarnations.

Superlative Device

The trouble, however, and this seems to have gone unnoticed in a generally ecstatic press, is that although he has found a super-lative stage device, Nichols doesn't seem to have found much to do with it. "Passion Play" is a depressingly soap-operatic account of a marriage on the rocks, desperately lack-ing the humor and the nostalgic insights of his earlier plays and oddly lacking, too, in any real development either of plot or char-acter.

James is an art restorer and dealer. Eleanor sings in the choir at Albert Hall, thereby allowing James to start an illicit affair with the mistress of a deceased buddy while listen-ing to radio broadcasts in order to ascertain the precise time of his wife's return home.

There is also a vindictive widow (Priscilla Morgan) who keeps Eleanor informed of James' infidelities, plus the aforementioned mistress (Louise Jameson), the two splendid alter egos, and a number of extras whom the RSC, unlike a West End management, has hor, minute a west find management, has been able to provide as party guests, restau-rant diners, figures in one of Eleanor's night-mares and generally to fill out Patrick Robertson's huge and elegant setting, which appears to be representing a town house of roughly the dimensions of Windsor Castle.

As if exhausted by his invention of the doppelgangers (whom I long to see in a stronger play) Nichols has fallen back on the hoariest of plot devices. The wife only discovers that the mistress is still having an affair with her husband when she mentions his visit to Switzerland and the mistress lets slip the word Zurich. The wife then says, "But I never mentioned Zurich," for all the world like an inspector in the last reel of a British picture of the 1940s.

"Passion Play" much resembles Harold Pinter's recent "Betrayal" in that a stage de-vice (there it was to begin at the end and work back to the beginning) is allowed to take the place of any real depth of feeling or personality. Though Nichols writes passion-ate speeches about the death of marriage and the birth of love they fail interchangetably the birth of love, they fall interchangeably from have a very hard to care about. Thus we have a very clever but at heart curiously and attempt to deal with the destructive powers of sex and marriage set against a lapsed-Christian background (she sings the St. Matthew Passion, he restores religious paintings) which ends up in lines like "You're overlooking the fact that I love this man," lines that would not sound out of place in "Dallas" if only anybody there could member them.

But Whitelaw-Atkins and Whitrow-Rodgers work so well together as aspects of the same two people that one ends up hoping , they will abandon the increasingly migid me-chanics of a will-they-won't-they-stay-togeth-er plot and just settle for being a couple of , marvelous double acts in search of a play.

The Associated Press LOS ANGELES - Five alleged Mafia figures convicted in an al-leged plot to shake down local pornngraphers were sentenced to jail hy a judge whn said he agreed with a witness that the organized crime family that controls Los Angeles is "second rate at best."

The sentencings Tuesday by U.S. District Judge Terry Hatter culminated one of the government's most heralded organized crime prosecutions. Those sentenced were Dominic Phillip Brooklier, 66, described as the boss of the Los Angeles Mafia family; Samuel Orlando Sciortino, 62, a reputed underboss; and Louis Tom Dragna, 59, said to have act-ed as boss while the latter two served prison terms; Jack LoCicero, 68, and Michael Rizzitello.

The terms ranged from two to five years, and Mr. Scintino and Mr. Dragna also were fined $25,000 each. The five were convicted of racketeering, extortion and conspiracy in the alleged shakedown scheme. One of the pornography outfits turned out to be an FBI undercover operation that recorded transactions. The men were allowed to remain free pending appeals.

The jodge recalled that the star witness in the trial - confessed Mafia hit man Jimmy Fratianno had described the Los Angeles Mafia as a second-rate chapter of the national crime organization. Judge Hatter said be concurred.

FRANKFURT — A West Ger-man court renewed a 1959 arrest warrant Wednesday against Josef Mengele, the Auschwitz death camp doctor allegedly living in Uruguay.

Prosecutor Hans-Eherhard Klein said that the court granted his request to remind judges abroad that West German courts are maintaining their allegations against the now 70-year-old Nazi fugitive - who the new arrest warrant says is suspected of murder and attempted murder of thou-sands of Auschwitz inmates be-tween 1943 and 1945.

According to Simon Wiesenthal, the Nazi hunter, Dr. Mengele lives in Uruguay and works in a prison under the assumed name "Willi Karp."

Doubling of Aid Expected

TOKYO - Japan plans to douhie its aid to developing countries over the next five years, to more than $21.4 billion up to 1985, compared with an estimated $10.7 bilhon spent in the last five years, government sources said. Mr. Suzuki is expected propose the plan in his policy speech before parliament carly next week. The increase follows a pledge by

Mr. Suzuki on his recent tour of countries of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations that his government would expand aid. Last November, the Foreign Ministry said in a special report that helping developing countries secure stability by providing eco-nomic assistance will in turn enable Japan to maintain its own economic growth.

The report also said it is necessary for Japan to contribute to the improvement of relations between developing and developed countries, nating Japan cannot rely on military power for security. They added Japan had kept its promise made at the 1978 Bonn summit to double official development assistance hy 1980.

Japanese aid in this form last year was estimated to have reached about $3.3 billion, over double the $1.42 billion in 1977, bringing the official aid ratio to gross national product to between 0.31 percent and 0.32 percent, up from 0.26 per-cent in 1979, the sources said.

TELL EL RUBA, Egypt - "The rain is cu-L rious and does not appear to be noticed in the guidebooks," wrote a young Englishman, Alfred Butler, after visiting the remains of Mendes in the lash Nile Delta. "It is unlike anything else which I have seen in Egypt and deserves exploration."

That observation was made in the spring of 1880. A century later, the ancient pharsonic capital of Mendes, where the sacred ram was worshipped and whose mounds even now extend over more than 500 acres, remains largely an enigma. So do many other buried treasures of the delta - an area whose fertile archaeo-logical history has been eclipsed by dramatic pharaonic monuments such as Luxor and Abu Simbel in Upper Egypt.

The Egyptian government has concentrated its scant financial resources on the tombs and temples of Upper Egypt's and expanse, which will attract tourists. Yet, the neglected delta sites are potentially richer in historical information and in practical clues to the country's ancient civilizations. "Traditionally, in Egyp-tology you learn anthing about the delta," said Bernard Bothmer, chairman of the department of Egyptian and classical art at the Brooklyn Museum. "You do not have here the kind of spectacular sites that you have at Karnak and Luxor because very few things are standing upright. We are overinformed about ancient structures. We are underinformed about how the ancient Egyptians lived."

Some archaeologists fear that the delta's valuable antiquities are being lost as the land is absorbed by expanding towns, chewed up by modern tractors or scraped off to be used for desert reclamation.

To fsthom the delta's buried secrets, skill and expertise are needed. Since 1964, when archaeologists started working at Mendes, barely percent of the site has been explored, in Bothmer's estimate

July in fits

Though Mendes, 70 miles north of Cairo, reached its zenith in the sixth century B.C., it was first mentioned in Egyptian texts more than 4,000 years ago. The more recent southern comb, or mound, spans the Hellenic and early Roman periods in Egypt. The town's mud-brick dwellings of five and six stories were not meant to withstand the centuries like the sealed rock tombs of Upper Egypt.

Moreover, farmers collecting fertilizer have dug up the compacted refuse in the streets, leaving walls studded with pottery shards.

These factors endanger a treasure trove of antiquities. Excavations have unearthed, for example, painted limestone tombs called mastabas, possibly dating back 4,200 years. Workers have found decorated Greek pottery from the eighth to sixth centuries B.C., confirming the continuous habitation the city enjoyed.

Single-Block Shrine

The most conspicuous monument at Mendes is a hollowed-out shrine rising on fnundations nearly 30 feet above the surrounding fields. The pink granite "naos," erected in the sixth century B.C., is the largest shrine of its kind carved from a single block in Egypt; three simllar shrines lie broken in the dust, and several dozen sarcophagi, carved from granite and basalt hlocks to hold mummified sacrificial rams, are strewn about. Other puzzles are posed by a retaining wall, 30 feet high and a quarter-mile long, and by a barren quadrangle that looks like a football field.

Teams sponsored by New York University's department of fine arts and the Brooklyn Museum work at Mendes 10 to 12 weeks a year. The dig has been financed largely by the U.S. government and the manufacturer of 7-Up.

But currently, the government funds gener ated by past grain sales to Egypt are being di-verted to support the growing official U.S. presence in that country, prospectively leaving no money for archaeological work within the next few years. While Egyptian officials have been sympathetic to the efforts of arch gists, other significant sites in the delta an ing into oblivion. The area was probably filled with temples and sanctuaries, but a tact today lie under 20 or 30 feet of mud.

At Iscum, near the provincial capital Mansura, weeds obscure the jumbled g hlocks of a temple huilt in the third ca B.C., though their life-sized relief figure hieroglyphics could grace any museum. A Basta, near the town of Zagazig, Egypti chaeologists in the 1950s excavated a h Kingdom palace some 4,000 years old. temple pillars still stand, their hierogly defaced by Arabic graffiti. Bureaucrati tape in Cairo has hampered archaeologic forts. A security clearance needed to undea dig used to take a few days. The wai lasts three to four months, Bothmer said.

Some Egyptian archaeologists share the cern that time is slipping by. "We have the ry up and dig sites, especially those threas by population mostly in Lower Egypt," of them, Dr. Labih Habachi, said. "In the edelta, where there were contacts with the utes and Babylonians, one can find so that would explain things we can't find in or or Aswan. These places must be done t they are lost forever."

Drug Stocks: Healthy Prognosis

By Vartanig G. Vartan New York Times Service

NEW YORK — During the first half of the 1960s, the shares of Syntax Corp, went up like a rocket on the American Stock Exchange. That performance stemmed from the company's role as the leader in selling oral contraceptives. Then, between early 1966 and mid-1970, the stock toppled from a price just above 60 to a low of 9. Since then, reflecting the varying fortunes of the company, Syntex has won o reputation as one of the most volatile issues in the market. In August 1980, following an extended period when the stock was locked in a relatively narrow trading range. Larry Smith, a drug analyst for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., issued o buy recommendation. Syntex was selling then at 45. His recommendation was based on "the anticipation of 20 to 25 perceot annual growth in earnings per share over the oext four years." This pro-jection, Mr. Smith ooted, reflected prospects for cootioned stroog growth in the company's antiarthritie drug, Naprosyn, as well as "meaningful contributions" from other Syntex products.

It was, to retrospect, a most timely call. Syntex hit a record price of 76% in December, then moved lower in the general market pullback. In an interview, Mr. Smith said: "Tm very favorably disposed on the fundamentals for Syntex, vorably disposed oo the fundamentals for Syntex, but you've got to remember that it's a stock with enormous volatility." On a loog-term basis, Syntex now ranks third among his favorites in the pharmaceutical group. He is, to begin with, resolutely bullish on pros-pects for drug stocks. "I focus on fundamentals," Mr. Smith said, "and I think we're going through a fundamental upgradiog for this group." Some institutional money managers share his long-range optimism for the drugs. For example, John Groome, a senior vice president at United States Trust Co., said: "I think you'll see an accel-eration in earnings starting in 1981 for pharma-eration in earnings starting in 1981 for pharma-centical companies because of their introductioo of new drugs. Furthermore, this is not a capital-intensive industry, so that it is not burt hadly by high interest rates. I look for an upward re-evalua-tion of earnings multiples in drug stocks."

Mr. Smith's favorites, io order of preference, are Pfizer and Sterling Drug. "We think that Pfizer's portfolio of new drugs is outstanding," be said. "It has been one of our purchase recommendations for more than two years and contioues to be recommended. We feel that the company's earnings growth rate will ac-celerate to between 20 and 25 percent annually as it rolls out new products. "These include the antihypertensive Mi-nipress Minizide, antiarthritic Feldene, antianginal Procardia, injectable cephalosporin antibiotic Celobid, oral anobiotic Bacacil and several lesser products," he added. "In the near term, the probable key to excellent stock market performance is the timing of the introduction in the United Sates of Feldene."

If introduction of Feidene is further delayed, the analyst said, "We think Pfizer will be a good but oot a great stock within the group in 1981." In either event, he recommends purchase because of "our enthusiasm for the long term." As for Sterling Drug, Mr. Smith observed: "Our positive investment thesis has been based oo the belief that its new drug for coogestive beart failure, Inocor (ammone), possesses a sufficiently exciting pharmacological profile that it may con-stitute a therapeutic and commercial breakthrough. Based on present evidence, aminone seems considerably more effective than digitalis, the current drug of choice for congestive heart failure, and may also be safer. If oogoing clinical trials establish this, the commercial payoff could huge." Meanwhile, he emphasized that amrinone "is still in a stage of development in which failure due to previously undetected aide effects or toxicity can occur."

The December trade balance was in surplus by $2.39 billion, up sharply from a $545 million sur-plus in the previous month and from a $731 million surplus in December 1979. Meanwhile, Bank of Japan Governor Haruo Maekawa said the bank's monetary policy remains unchanged for now because there seems little danger of the Japanese economy taking a sudden turn for the worse. He told a press conference after a two-day meeting of the bank's branch managers that monetary policy, including the official dis-count rate, will be based on an overall judgment of various economic factors.

However, Japan's economic environment has been changing slow-ly due to price stabilization and the strengthening trend of the yen, Mr. Mackawa said.

An Autobiography By Alan Paton, Scribners, 320 pp. $16.95. Reviewed by Harris Wofford

TOWARDS THE MOUNTAIN

SHAKESPEARE, Blackstone and the Bible were Abraham Lincoln's main curriculum. Born in Pietermaritzburg in the valley of the Umsindusi River in 1903. Alan Paton read more widely than Lincoln, but the Bible was at the core of what he learned and thought. And Lincoln, whom he considered "the greatest of all the rulers of nations" was a star in his firmament, one that shone from far away on the "lovely road than runs from Ix-opo into the hills."

In his autobiography, "Towards the Mountain," Paton tells how in 1946, shortly after writing the first words of "Cry, the Beloved Coun-try," his novel about South Africa's racial ordeal, he stood in awe before the seated figure in the Lincoln Memorial. The United States would become for him "the country of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights," but already, thanks to Lincoln, it was the "shore dimly seen."

Paton's quietly moving auto-biography builds slowly, as his life seems to have done, coming to a climax when, alone, on that 1946 trip abroad, "under the influence of powerful emotion," he started to write the book that was to sell millions of copies and make him famous. Although a life of political action and literature lay ahead, he looks back fondly on the emotion that possessed him at age 43, and notes sadly: "I do not expect, and for a long time have oot expected, to be revisited by it."

Except for the ecstasy the young Paton felt for nature, there is a dullness in the first part of his life story. Perhaps it is the "awful odor of goodness" coming out of a de-vout Christadelphian ("brothers of Christ"), boru-again fundamental-ist family. He reacted against the authoritizianizm in his home and authoritarianism in his home, and came to hate his father. Yet in this antobiography he proves to be his father's son, viewing lust and an-ger as the "volcanic sins" from which one must run.

Very early Paton knew what he did not like. At age 13, when his dentist tried to seduce him, he drew back and said, with a clarity and finality that made him con-scious of having a will of his own: "I don't like that." The man gave him half a crown, saying, "That is the reward of virtue," Paton adds, "I did not stop going to Dr. B., but to my regret, there were no more rewards for virtue."

Twenty-two years later, in 1938, he came to the same decisioo about Afrikaner nationalism, He had been sympathetic to the Boers, whose ancestors had been white Africans for three centuries -Christian Zionists who were the first pioneer settlers to rebel against British colonialism. On the centenary of the Boers' Great Trek oorthward to escape British rule, Paton was one of the few English-

"The most powerful education agent is the community itself," I had concluded while reforming th reformatory at Diepkloof. By e tablishing an increasingly larg measure of freedom. Paton hop. to teach young Africans to mo away from a life of crime and vi lence.

By restricting the freedom black, colored and Indian Soc Africans, the Nationalist gover ments of Malan, Verwoerd a. Vorster taught the opposite less Paton's autobiography moves in-orably toward the great fear th darkens the last pages of "Cry." Beloved Country:" that when white people are ready to love, black people will be ready to hat

Alan Paton is one who has be ready to love. As a boy, his he first awoke to a love of the land his birth. At age 77 he still says he did at 21, that "I had for be for worse, for richer for poo given myself to this strange co try, to love and cherish till de us did part."

Later he fell in love with t did not dare touch) a marr woman named Dorrie Lusted. ter her busband died, she hec: Paton's wife. Twice in the nex. years, he says, he transgressed marriage. He tells us (and told wife) of the first transgress when be loved and parted wi young woman for whom he great passion. Of the second says only that "candor is no constant occessity" and he sav oced "to give the complete stor" my sexual life."

Although he has trouble the commandment to love your emies, he writes ardently abou heroes, and the flame he has dr from several of them seems to? warmed and illumined his lif. he does not succeed in brin these special men and wome bright life in this book, we do ; sense of how, in his fiction, have gone through a prism come out in so many vivid cc The originals of the small boy the hrightness in him, and young man who hid his gentle, ture behind the fierce and fre ing eyes, and other characters : + his oovels, are here. Most of a 77 course, Alan Paton is here it straight, simple and true.

Patoo attributes in part t virtues of his literary style to early training in mathematics physics, which made it difficul him to overembellish and to tend that he had a solution v he had not. It is religious faith science, however, that become-guide for his pursuit of the t important kind of truth, "w one would never find, hut which ooe would oever searching."

Shortcut Across Mississippi River

Proves a Breakthrough for Pair United Press Internati

HARPER'S FERRY, Iowa — Two men got the scare of their lives trying to take a shortcut across the Mississippi River.

Their car crashed through thin ice and sank in the main channel of the river early Toesday but both men escaped serious injury. The two decided to cut across on the ice because the U.S. 18 bridge linking northeast Iowa with Prairie du Chien, Wis., had been closed and the nearest bridge was 35 miles away.

"If that darned bridge hadn't been closed, we'd never have tried this," the Allamakee County sheriff's office quoted one of the men as saying.

A sheriff's spokesman said Ken Galloway, 31, and Robert Boss, 27, attempted to drive across the ice-covered river from a point near Harper's Ferry to the Wisconsin side. When the car started to sink, they hopped out and made it to thicker ice.

speaking South Africans to join a mass pilgrimage to Pretoria.

From the black African boys' re-formatory that he then directed, he set forth by ox-wagon, flourishing a newly-grown Afrikaner-type beard and flying the flag of the old Transvaal Republic. Caught in the fervor of a quarter-million Boers on the march, he sooo discovered, to his horror, the anti-British and anti-hlack fanaticism being released.

Thundering against "ungodly equality," Dr. D.F. Malan de-clared that "the Afrikaans-speaking man of the new Great Trek meets' the non-European at the new Blood River." A Boer said to Paton, in Afrikaans, "Now we'll knock hell into the English."

A decade later, the Afrikaner majority of white South Africans had brought Malan to power, and they were knocking hell into the English, and even more hell into the colored and Indian minorities and the black majority. By 1948 Paton's good will toward the Boers had turned to ashes, and he had left the small world of professional education, in the reformatory, for the larger educational role of polit-ical opposition.

MOST of the players who reached game with the North-South cards shown in the diagram played four spades. This was not unreasonable, but there was no hope. The declarer had to lose a diamond trick and at least three trump tricks.

But one North-South threaded a delicate path to three no-trump, deliberately rejecting spades. South's two-diamond bid showed that he had a strong overcall with

There was at least one racer who was not much interested in points. As the last entrant out of the starting gate in the first run, Kate Rat-tray of New Zealand was skiing in Europe for the first time - in her

Casey Verbatim: A Public Service

Red Smith

New York Times Servic

NEW YORK - A young wom-an asked, "What was Casey Stengel like?" I thought she was pulling my leg until I realized that she was nine years old when Casey, retiring as manager of the New York Mets, dropped out of public view.

"Casey Stengel," I said, "was — well, just a minute." I dug up my copy of Casey's testimony before the Senate Subcommittee on Anti-trust and Monopoly on July 9, 1959 It commences the show they 1958. It seems to me that those of us who covered Casey in his time owe it to history to reintroduce him to readers this way at least once a decade. Sen. Estes Kefauver: "Mr. Sten-sel, you are the manager of the New York Yankees. Will you give us very briefly your background and your views about this legislation'

Sure Thing, Senator

Stengel: "Well, I started in pro-fessional ball in 1910. I have been in professional ball, I would say, for 48 years. I have been employed by oumerous ball clubs in the majors and in the minor leagues.

"I entered in the minor leagues with Kansas City. I played as low as Class D ball, which was at Shelbyville, Ky., and also Class C ball and Class A ball, and I have advanced in baseball as a ballplayer.

no doubt discharged by baseball in which I had to go back to the minor leagues as a manager, and after being in the minor leagues as a manager, I became a major-league manager in several cities and was discharged - we call it discharged because there is no question I had to leave.

"And I returned to the minor leagues at Milwankee, Kansas City and Oakland, Calif., and then returned to the major leagues. In the last 10 years, naturally, with the New York Yankees, the New York Yankees have had tremendous success and while I am not a ballplayer who does the work I have no doubt worked for a ball club that is very capable in the off-

"I have been up and down the ladder. I know there are some things in baseball 35 to 50 years ago that are better now than they were in those days. In those days, my goodness, yoo could not trans-fer a ball club in the minor leagues, Class D, Class C ball, Class A ball.

"How could you transfer a ball clob when you did oot have a high-way? How could you transfer a ball club when the railroads then would take you to a town you got off and then you had to wait and Preference.

"I had many years that I was sit up five hours to go to another not so successful as a ballplayer, as it up five hours to go to another ball club? have enough money to go to dental college so I had to go with the manager down to Kentucky. "How could you run baseball then without night ball? You had to have night ball to improve the proceeds, to pay larger salaries, and I went to work, the first year I received $135 a month. I thought that was amazing. I had to put away enough money to go to dental college. I found out it was not better in dentistry. I stayed in baseball.

"Any other questions you would like to ask me?"

Kefanver: "Mr. Stengel, are you prepared to answer particularly why baseball wants this bill passed?"

Stengel: "Well, I would have to say at the present time. I think that baseball has advanced in this respect for the player help. That is an amazing statement for me to make, because you can retire with an annuity at 50 and what organi-zation in America allows you to retire at 50 and receive money? "Now the second thing about baseball that I think is very interesting to the public or to all of us is that it is the owner's fault if he does not improve his club, along with the officials in the ball club and the players.

1-Man Socratic Method

"Now what causes that? "If I am going to go on the road and we are a traveling ball club and you know the cost of transpor-tation now — we travel sometimes with three Pullman coaches, the New York Yankees, and I'm just a salaried man and do oot own stock in the New York Yankees - I found out that in traveling with the New York Yankees oo the road and all, that it is the best, and we have broken records in Wash-ington this year, we have broken them in every city but New York and we have lost two clubs that have gone out of the city of New York "Of course, we have had some bad weather. I would say that they are mad at us in Chicago, we fill the parks. They have come ont to see good material. I will say they are mad at us in Kansas City, but we broke their attendance records. "Now on the road we only get possibly 27 cents. I am not positive of these figures, as I am not an official. If you go back 15 years or if I owned stock in the club, I would give them to you," Kefauver: "Mr. Stengel, I am nol sure that I made my question Stengel: "Yes, sir. Well, that is all right. I am not sure I'm going to answer yours perfectly, either." Sen. Joseph O'Mahoney: "How many minor leagues were there in baseball when you began?" Stengel: "Well, there were oot so many at that time because of this fact: Anybody to go into base-manager down to Kentucky. "What happened there was if you got by July, that was the big date. You did not play night ball and you did oot play Sundays in ball of the citize here was of a Sunhalf of the cities because of a Sunday observance, so in those days when things were tough, and all of it was, I mean to say, why they just closed up July 4 and there you were sitting there in the depot. You could go to work some place else, but that was it. "So I got oot of Kankakee, Ill. and I just go there for the visit now.

Sen. John Carroll: "The question Sen. Kefauver asked you was what, in your honest opinion, with your 48 years of experience, is the need for this legislation in view of the fact that baseball has not been subject to antitrust laws?"

Stengel: "No." Carroll: "I had a conference with one of the attorneys repre-senting not only baseball but all of the sports, and I listened to your explanation to Sen. Kefauver.

"It seemed to me it had some clarity. I asked the attorney this question: What was the need for this legislation? I wonder if you would accept his definition. He said they didn't want to be subject-ed to the ipse dixit of the federal government because they would throw a lot of damage suits on the ad damman clause. He said, in the first place, the Toolson case was sui generis, it was de minimus non curat lex." Stengel: "Well, you are going to get me there for about two hours." Kefanver: "Thank you very much, Mr. Stengel. We appreciate your presence bere. "Mr. Mickey Mantle, will you come around?

"Mr. Mantle, do you have any observations with reference to the applicability of the antitrust laws to baseball? Mantle: "My views are just about the same as Casey's."

Walking In and Hitting

g today." Mamby is the preserver of lost arts. In an era then flash is mistaken for skill and craftsmanship as given way to assembly lines. Mamby is a preious memory. He feints oot only with his fists, builders and head, he feints with his feet. There is the times in the ring when he moves opposite to the direction in which he appears to be heading.

When he works out, the other fighters, the ones who want to learn, stop and watch. Mamby is a -43-year-old graduate school who has learned his

"He's got it all," said an admiring Gerry Coo-ey, the undefeated heavyweight who heads the 'eb. 23 card at Madison Square Garden that now vill probably include Mamby's fight with Aaron 'tyor, the 25-year-old undefeated World Boxing Association junior welterweight champion who is ecuperating from gunshot wounds.

Cooney, training for his fight against Ken Nor-on, has been around Gleason's long enough to ppreciate Mamby. "What fancy moves," said looney.

Craftsman

Few fighters offer opponents smaller targets. Even fewer know how to block punches the way Mamby does. Only a handful are left who know bow to throw punches while moving backward. His punches are classic - short and with so little motion their power is deceiving. He is, probably, the master craftsman of the ring today. He is the vol rofessional. He is also, as usual, the underdog.

"I became world champion when they same " souldn't do it," he said, taping his hands. "I'm toing to beat Pryor, too, which they say I can't do. "I became world champion when they said I like the odds against me." Pryor is 25, undefeated in 27 pro fights with 25 knockouts, an attacker who charges opponents from unlikely angles but who pays little attention for mulikely angles but who pays nine anendon we to defense. Pryor is so tough bullets don't stop. الم في المراجع nim from training.

"He's a superman, huh?" said Mamby, who has never been knocked off his feet in a pro career dating back to 1969 and including such opponents a Roberto Duran Antonio as Roberto Duran, Antonio Cervantes, Edwin Viruet, Esteban DeJesus, Harold Weston and Benny Huertas.

Mamby, the World Boxing Council champion, was to have fought Pryor in Las Vegas Feb. 7, but the WBA champion had a domestic quarter that ended with a .22-caliber bullet going through his right forearm.

There was oo major damage, but Muhammad Ali Professional Sports, the promoters, thought it rwould be better to move the fight ahead to Feb. 23 at the Garden. Mamby, who was born, bred and bar-mitzvahed in the Bronx, is not keen on the idea of fighting in his bometown. They don't like me here," he said. The professional is a boxer, not a singger.

"In my philosophy," he said, "science over-comes brute force mytime." Especially when sci-ence can take a punch — "and punch back."

February when, behind on points in the last February when, behind on points in the last round at Scoul, he stopped Kim Sang-Hyun of South Korea. "I got the title the hard way," he said, "right out of the lion's mouth." Nothing came easy. He became a fighter after the South Broux. He discovered he liked fighting. "Everything I know was taught me by Al Smith," he said, referring to his 71-year-old train-er, who has been with him from the beginning. "In the beginning, I told him that when the gnys he was fighting then, the guys in the gym with him, were all finished and retired, he would go on to be a world champion," said Smith. "I knew he could learn everything. The 2550 000 he will even against Proper is by for

The $250,000 he will earn against Pryor is by far the biggest purse of a career that did not reach six figures for any fight until his first title defense, last July against DeJesus.

Leonard? 'Not a Thinker'

The professional said there were other good boxers around. Larry Holmes, "the best heavy-weight oot there," and Duran, he said, know how to feint and the other tricks of the trade. "Sugar Ray Leonard? He's flashy, but he's not a .

learn his trade and be one hell of a fighter. I'd like to fight him after Pryor." The professional respects boxers and trainers, but he has little use for managers. "Never have so few taken so much from so many," he said. "In five or six years, managers will be extinct. All a fighter will need is a lawyer." He is trying to get out of a contract with his current manager, Carl King, the 23-year-old son of Don King, the promoter whom Mamby has just left for MAPS. He had signed a promotional con-tract with the father for two years, and the father had named his son as manager. But when Mamby went to Korea to fight for the title, he did not bother to take Carl King. "The only time I ever see Carl is in the locker room before the fight," he said.

room before the fight," he said.

He decided to leave the Kings when they told him they had signed for him to fight Obisa Nwankpa, the African champion, in Nigeria. "Twe been globe-trotting all my career," said Mamby, who has longht from Thailand to Paris, Korea to Kingston. "If they want the title, let them come and get it. I know about fighting over-seas. The first thing they do is take your passport. I told Carl I wouldn't go and he insisted I had to go, that he had signed.

" 'You signed,' I said. Then you go over there and make 140 pounds.' Something else."

Message From the East

After a brisk workout, back upstairs in the locker room, an Indonesian promoter introduced him-self and said he wanted Mamby to defend the title in Jakarta against someone named Thomas Americo, whom the promoter said was undefeated in 100, whom the promoter and was undereated in seven fights and was ranked No. 3 in the world. "I got to beat Pryor first," said the professional. "And if I get $250,000 for half the title, then I get $500,000 for the whole thing."

"I'm not here to really negotiate," said the pro-moter. "I just wanted to introduce myself and get to know you. That's how we do things.

Yeah, well, sooner or later we'd have to discuss the bottom line," said the professional. "I'm just saving time." The promoter said he would contact MAPS and left.

"Seven fights and he's ranked," someone said to Mamby about the proposed opponent. "It took me 35 fights to get a ranking," said the profession-al as Smith started to rub him down. "Hey, Al, your hands are too cold. Here, let me do it." He took the lotion from his trainer and started rubbing his own arms and legs. "No," he said, "I never had an idol, until one day, on film, I watched myself and said, Now I'm a boxer.' "

"I told you. The president is on his honeymoon with the American people. You should know, sir, that on a honeymoon you can't believe anything bad of the person you're with. That's why it's called a boneymoon. You've got four years ahead of you. What's the big rush in writing about him now?"

The Legacy of Adolphe Sax

An exhibition on Adolphe Sax and the past and present of the saxophone, at the Centre Cul-turel de la Communaute Francaise de Belgique through March 15, is an interesting collection of documents, vintage instruments and audio-visual illustrations. about the inventor and his invention. The displays include Sax's other inventions: families of brass instruments called saxborns, saxotrombas and saxtubas; an enormous organ powered and pushed by a steam locomo-tive for public events; a design for an egg-shaped concert hall; an air purifier for sufferers of respiratory diseases - 46 patents in all. But he is principally remembered for the saxophone family, which in range, homogeneity, speed and subtlety, became the wind instrument equivalent of the violin family and the musical voice of the 20th century.

Adolphe Sax was born in Dinant, Belgium, on Nov. 6, 1814, the son of Charles-Joseph Sax, whose factory employing 200 workers was the largest wind-instrument producer in Europe: At the age of 12, Adolphe was an apprentice there. He studied flute at the Brussels Royal Conserva-tory of Music and won a prize playing the revolutionary finger-ing system devised by Theobald Boehm. His first patent was for a redesigned bass clarinet, giving it more flexibility and power.

One of Adolphe Sax's seven-belled instruments.

Six-valve saxhorn.

He demonstrated his first saxophone in 1840, behind a curtain ecause it was not yet patented. It caught the attention of the sovernment of King Louis-Phi-lippe of France, which ordered its military officials to equip their bands with Sax's new instruments. There were articles in the newspapers, pro and con, and his competitors used their influence and filed lawsuits against him. A battle of the bands - one conducted by Sax, the other using traditional instruments — on the Champ de Mars in Paris resulted in a jury prize for Sax. The press

Sax moved to Paris. The revohution of 1848 installed a repubhic and ended the monarchy, including its support of Saz, who filed for bankruptcy in 1852. But the Second Empire followed shortly and in 1854 Napoleon III granted Sax a subsidy. As politi-cal forumes changed, he went bankrupt again, continuing his manufacturing business on a smaller scale. By the time of his death in 1894, he was in reduced circumstances and few people would have bet on the future of the saxophone.

Jazz

The saxophone was never seriously integrated into classical music, aside from isolated works of Berlicz, Igor Stravinsky, Dar-ins Milhaud and some others. Then came jazz. At the begin-ning, the dominant jazz instruments were transpers and cor-nets Buddy Bolden, King Oliver, Freddie Keppard and Louis Armstrong were early kings.

After that the saxophone began to take over. In 1918, a clarinet player named Sidney Bechet was seduced by a soprano saxophone in a London shop window. In his autohography, "Treat It Gentle," Bechet comments: "This was a piece of good luck for me because it wasn't long after this before people started say-ing they didn't want clarinets in their bands no more."

The saxophone began to be de-scribed as "throbbing" or "wail-ing" as soloists such as Bechet. Adrian Rollini and Johnny Hod-ges rediscovered it in the "20s. Its melodic capabilities were ex-plored by Ben Webster, Coleman Unreling and Lester Voung in Hawkins and Lester Young in the '30s. Saxophone sections were the real stars of the dance bands. Charlie Parker played it harder and faster in the '40s. Lee Konitz and Pani Desmond cooled it out in the 'Sls. Serge Chaloff, Gerry Mulligan and Pepper Adams picked up from Ellingtonian Harry Carney and explored the underexposed bartone sax. Steve Lacy rediscovered the soprano, which had been ne-glected since Bechet.

Substitutes

Louis Jordan, King Curtis and Junior Walker introduced the saxophone to rhythm and blaes as combos gradually replaced big-bands in popular music. John Coltrane and Frie Dolphystretched the physical and emo-tional range of the saxophone in the '60s, while Archie Shepp, Pharoah Sanders and Albert

Inventor Sax.

Ayler invented sounds never before heard. With rock 'n' roll, the instrument went into eclipse along with jazz itself. The electric guitar took over. But to approach the subtlety and variety of saxo-phones, guitarists had to employ anxiliary equipment such as wab-wab pedals, phasers and flangers. The synthesizer, the first really new instrument invented since the saxophone, served cold '70s technopop well, but people need warmth too and the saxophone combines human breath with the speed of a guitar or a keyboard. In the mid-70s Andy McKay with Roxy Music and David Payne with Ian Drury introduced the saxophone to rock. Saxophones are an integral part of hot young groups such as the Q-Tips and Dexy's Midnight Runners. Clarence Clemons' tenor is essential to the power of Bruce Spring-steen's material. Phil Woods' alto has been featured prominently on Billy Joel hits. Steely Dan would not be quite what it is without Wayne Shorter's tenor.

So those of you who never knew it had left will be pleased to learn that the saxophone has been making a comeback. Its continuing contemporary appeal can be illustrated by a 16-yearold minsic student named Charles who recently switched from guitar to tenor sax, giving as his reason: "I want to play an instru-'ment I can kiss.'
